And now they are after us and our heritage; but we are just a way station on the road to erasing western civilization. Once that is out of the way, wiping humanity off the face of the earth will be a piece of cake for these folks.

Recognize that any boots-on-the-ground heritage defense will likely encounter run-ins with these folks. Don't make the mistake of thinking that because some are vacuous snowflakes that they all are. If they come around harassing you or your group, ignore them. Don't engage them, even verbally, because shouting matches can lead to throwing punches which, for these folks, can lead to arson, shattered plate-glass, and cracked skulls. Save physical defense for the times if and when it will truly be needed.

An Unalienable Right

In the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson established that people are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, and that governments are instituted to secure those rights.

One right he specifically identifies is the right of the people to alter or abolish their government and create another that suits them better. This right both pre-exists and transcends the U.S. Constitution.

How grotesque, then, that the only time Americans have attempted to exercise this right, the government that was supposed to secure it for them made brutal war on them instead.

The CSA and the Third Reich: Not equivalent -- not even close

When you see some smart-aleck snowflake on social media or comment threads claiming similarity between the Confederacy and Nazi Germany (i.e., slavery and the Holocaust), tell them this:

The Jewish population of Europe fell drastically during WWII. The black population of the USA and CSA -- before, during and after the war - - grew at basically the same rate as the white population.

There were no concentration camps in the CSA.

Inmates in death camps were worked to death and/or given rations scientifically calculated to starve them in three months. By contrast, American slaves ate much the same thing white people ate -- at least, in the South. What they ate is called "soul food" today and it's viewed very positively -- tasty and nutritious, if rather high in starch.

Laws in various states mandated that slaveowners support sick or aged slaves who were no longer able to work and that pregnant slaves be given lighter duties.

There were nine million Jews in Europe before WWII, three million afterward. For Nazi Germany and the CSA to be equivalent, 66% of the black population of the South, or 2,640,000 individuals, would've had to have been murdered by the government between 1861 and 1865.

Obviously, that did not happen because by 1870, the black population was 4.9 million. An increase of 900,000 is clearly not the same thing as a decrease of 6 million.

The Third Reich came into existence to eradicate a certain group of people from the face of the earth. Anyone who says the CSA is the same as that is engaging in hate speech.

An increase of 900,000 is clearly not the same as a decrease of 6 million.

The north did not fight to free slaves

1. Lincoln's call for volunteers did not mention slaves, slavery or freeing.
2. While warring on the South, they did nothing to free slaves in their own slave states.
3. During the war, West Virginia was "created" (in violation of the Constitution) and admitted to the union as a SLAVE STATE.
4. The "Emancipation Proclamation" did not emancipate any slaves in the north.

The powers prohibited to the states are identified in Article I, Section 10, of the U.S. Constitution. Secession is not among them, so it is not prohibited. The power to prohibit secession is not listed among the powers delegated to the United States or their agent, the federal government..

The 10th Amendment states "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited to by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people." Secession is a power reserved to the states and the people.

Secession's legally assumed. Otherwise, there would have been no need for this proposed legislation. Note the date:

No state or any part thereof, heretofore admitted or hereafter to be admitted into the Union, shall have power to withdraw from the jurisdiction of the United States; and this Constitution, and all laws passed in pursuance of its delegated powers, shall be the supreme law of the land therein, anything contained in any constitution, act, or ordinance of any State Legislature or convention to the contrary notwithstanding.

Trash People

"Southern slavocracy ... was a brutal, oppressive and apartheid regime that deserves to have been utterly destroyed."
Richard Meagher, Randolph-Macon College

Slavery in the South could have been ended any number of ways without bloodshed. The north could have quit buying and shipping the cotton, for example. But slavery was not the true target and ending it not the true goal. The actual target was the Southern people and utterly destroying them was the actual goal.

An opportunity to do that with war as too great a temptation for the union to pass up -- ruining their land, pillaging their homes and communities, plunging them into generational poverty and disease, enacting policies that prevented genuine economic development in the region for decades after the war -- then making Southerners the national trash people, the nation's demon people, the region so evil and guilty, everyone else in the country (who, you may be assured, are no better) looks righteous and saintly by comparison.

The virtual war on the Southern people continues to this day, in the popular culture, in the news and entertainment media, in government, in corporate America, in the educational establishment.

The Enemies Arrayed Against Us

One thing the heritage community has known for a long time was illustrated quite breathtakingly in New Orleans. Our opponents are socialists. But forget the tired old definitions of "controlling the means of production" and such. These tyrants want to control every aspect, and every moment, of your life.

And the ultimate goal isn't some magical some day when the state "withers away" and everyone governs themselves in peace and happiness. No, the ultimate goal of socialism, is quite, quite different.

Years ago, writer Joseph Sobran used the concept of a hive to illustrate the workings of socialists. Whether liberals, leftists, communists, Marxists, progressives, they held the same goals even if they worked toward them differently. The hive metaphor allows us to see their activities as coordinated without having to invoke a conspiracy.

One article about The Hive discusses the views of Soviet mathematician and dissident, Igor Shafarevich, who wrote The Socialist Phenomenon back in the 1980s. Shafarevich zeroes in on the chilling ultimate goal of socialism. Here's a recap of his views:

"...socialism had endured throughout history, usually in the form of one or another Christian heresy. It gives expression to the gnostic urge to rebel — the rebellion of the educated against the constraints imposed by Creation and by God. In earlier periods, when of course the socialist label was not used, it could be identified by its insistent, unvarying emphasis on certain goals: the destruction of private property and of the traditional or 'nuclear' family; and above all, the dis-memberment of traditional, or orthodox religion. Throughout history, the phenomenon has been obsessed with material equality, and with the eradication of individual and gender distinctions. It was incessantly against the normal. A 'striving for self-destruction,' for nothingness, for the "death of mankind," is the true goal of socialism. Instinctively, without stating it or even seeing it as the conscious goal, the socialist phenomenon seeks the death of the human race."

The steps to the death of the human race are:

1. Destruction of private property
2. Destruction of the traditional family
3. Destruction of traditional (Christian) religion

You recognize socialism by these traits:

1. Obsession with material equality
2. Obsession with the eradication of individual and gender differences
3. Incessant warring against the normal.

On the way to bringing about the death of mankind, any old destruction will do for these folks, including the hooded, masked, black-clad antifa, the KKK of the left, or what Baron Boddisey at Gates of Vienna Blog calls the Storm Troopers of the New World Order. Like the Soros-funded Black Lives Matter, antifa will fiendishly destroy property, whether in Berkeley and Seattle, or New Orleans and Charlottesville. And if they can't kill you, they will hurt you; remember their spraying pepper spray in the face of a senior man at a Trump event in California.
